What is Centralized Exchanges ?

The primary reason centralized cryptocurrency exchanges emerged is because, initially, cryptocurrency transactions were difficult to make. You needed to be familiar with the command line to use the programs, trust the person or entity you were transacting with, not make any mistakes while typing commands and long addresses, and much more. Investors became interested in the possibilities of returns and needed an easier and quicker way to buy and sell.

Entrepreneurs, seeing an opportunity, created business models for exchanges that stored private keys and connected buyers and sellers. This distinguished them from decentralized exchanges, which are not run or controlled by a single entity. Rather, they are controlled by a community that has governance rights over the exchange, voting on the way the exchange runs or changes being proposed.

Eventually, centralized exchanges began providing the same services that stock and commodities exchanges provide, which attracted the attention of regulators worldwide.

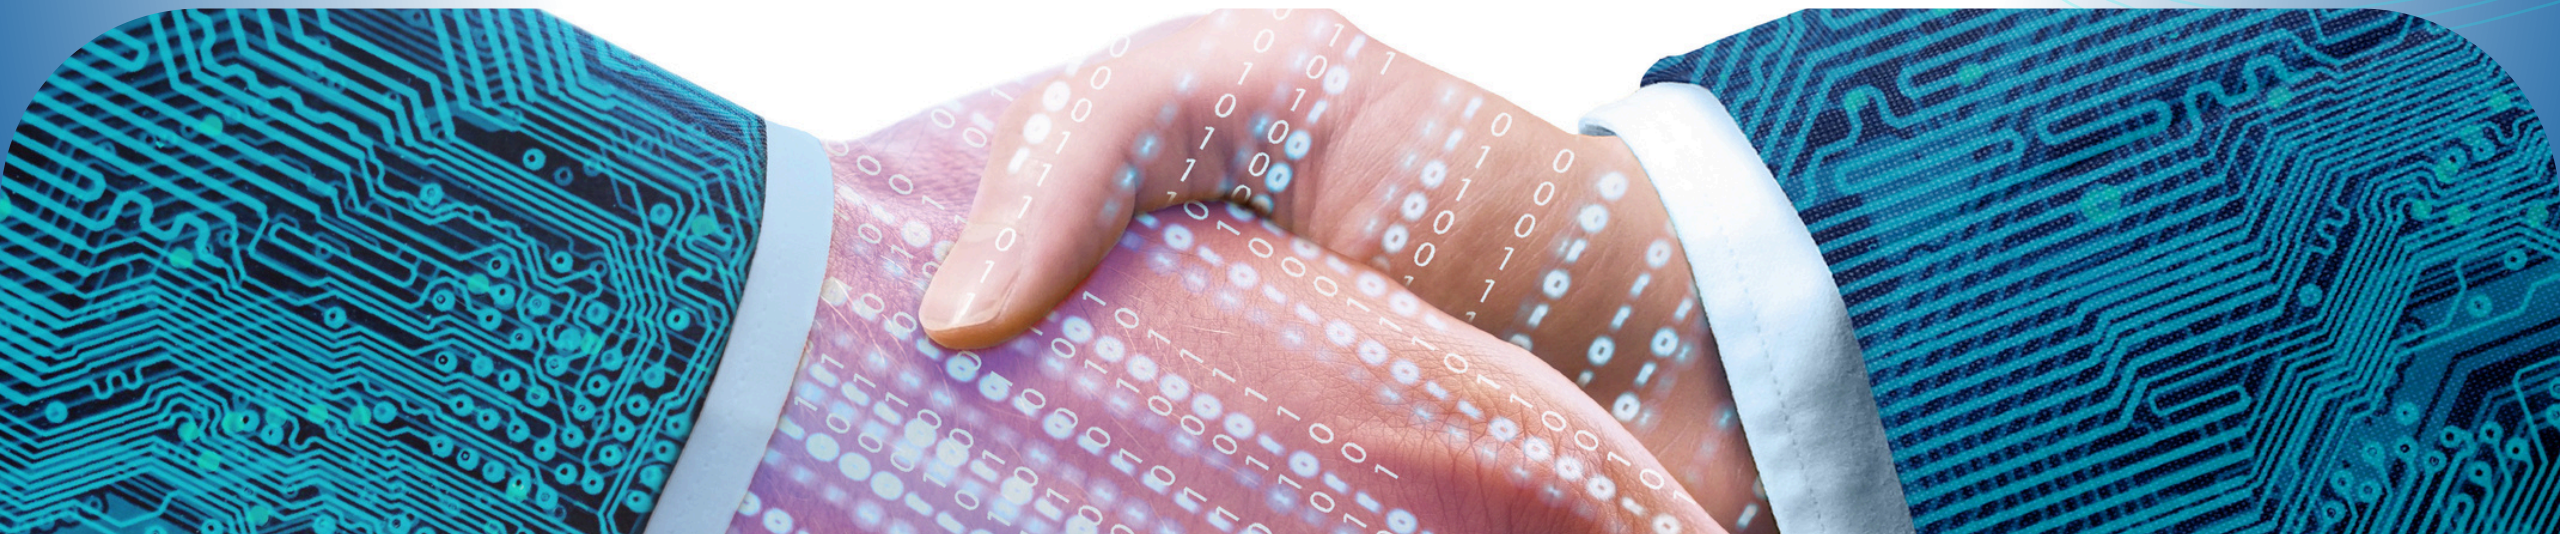

What is bot trading and how it works?

Bot trading on a crypto exchange is the process of buying or selling cryptocurrencies for immediate delivery at the current market price, also known as the spot price. When you engage in spot trading, you are trading assets on the spot — meaning the transaction is settled instantly, and ownership of the asset is transferred right away. For example, if you buy Bitcoin (BTC) using US dollars (USD), the BTC is delivered to your wallet on the exchange as soon as the trade is completed. To start spot trading, you first need to create an account on a cryptocurrency exchange like Binance, Coinbase, or Kraken, deposit funds (either fiat money or cryptocurrency), and then choose a trading pair, such as BTC/USDT or ETH/USD. You can place a market order to buy or sell instantly at the best available price or a limit order to execute the trade only at a specific price you set. Spot trading is simple and well-suited for beginners because it doesn't involve leverage, so there's no risk of liquidation. However, it also means potential profits are limited to the actual price movement of the asset. The key advantage is that you fully own the cryptocurrency once the trade is complete, allowing you to hold, transfer, or use it as you like.

The BrokerOn Revolution:

Your Automated Trading Broker

The true evolution of trading is in automation. The crypto market is filled with fleeting opportunities that are impossible for a human to capture alone. That's why we built the heart of our platform: The BrokerOn Bot.

This is not just another trading bot. It is a sophisticated, 24/7 automated broker designed to execute complex arbitrage strategies on your behalf. Here's how it creates a new paradigm for traders:

Identifies Low-Risk Opportunities: The bot constantly scans price discrepancies across numerous liquidity pools and markets. Its sole mission is to find and execute arbitrage trades—buying an asset at a low price in one place and simultaneously selling it at a higher price in another. This strategy is inherently designed to minimize market risk.

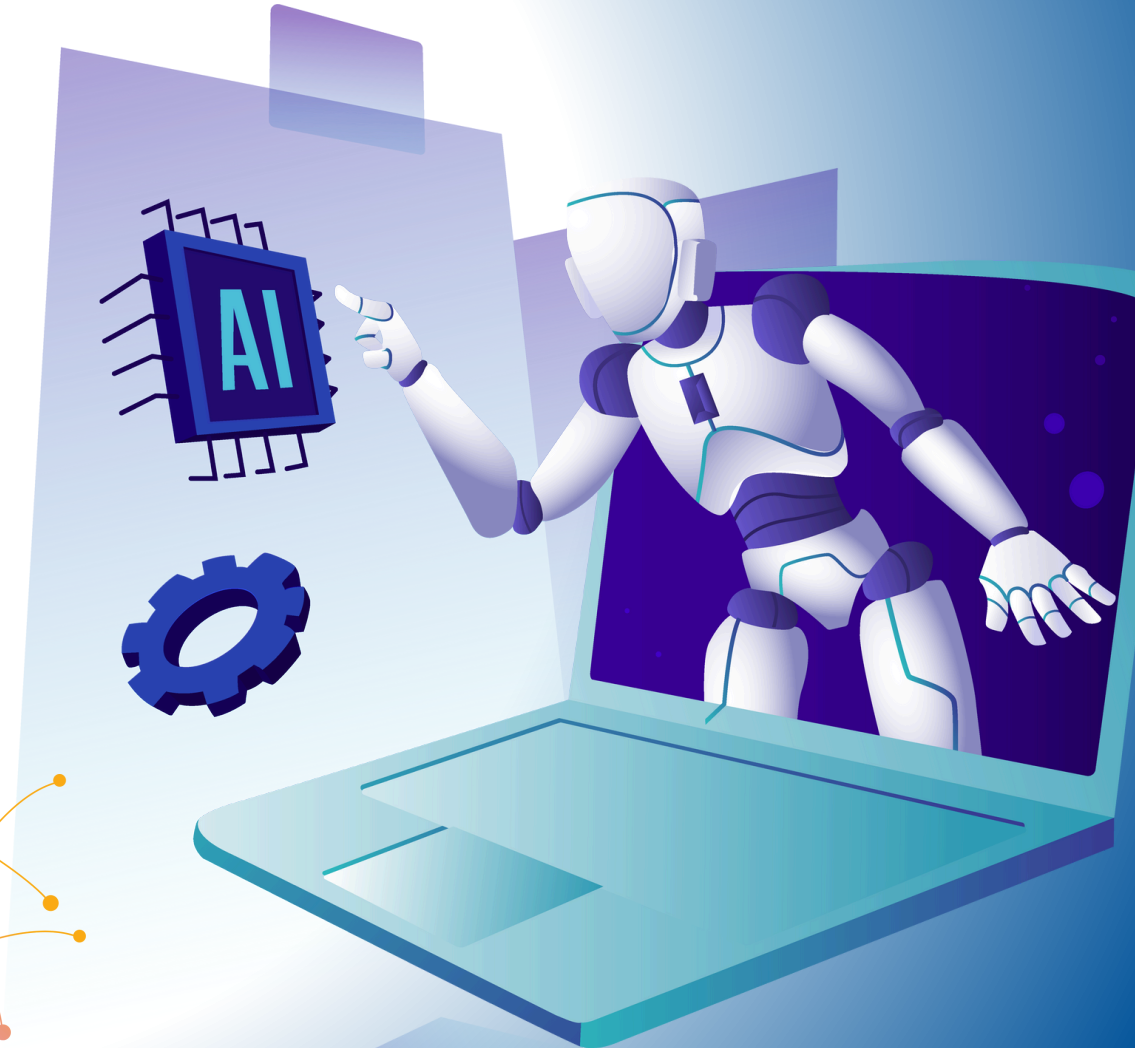

Trades 24/7 Without Emotion: The BrokerOn Bot operates around the clock, ensuring no opportunity is missed, whether you are working, sleeping, or on vacation. It trades based on pure data and logic, removing the emotional decision-making that often leads to losses.
